RAISING SUMMER CHICKS No Cause for Anxiety if the Amateur Will Adopt Certain Well

Defined Practices.

Plenty of Shade-Two Necessary Factors of Success.

BY MICHAEL K. BOYER.

(Copyright, 1915.)

There is profit in summer-hatched chicks if they are carefully and economically raised. But there are obstacles in rearing chicks during hot weather that do not present themselves in the cooler months of early

Where one has a large, old orchard he has an ideal spot for raising sum-mer chicks, and an excellent way is to set hens right out under these trees, in barrels laid on their sides, with a lath-run in front. After the hatch is over the barrels can be cleaned out, new soil thrown in, and the hen and her brood can make this their home until large enough to be moved to other quarters. On this shady range the youngsters will not mind the heat and they will secure grass and insects

Where the land is more imitted can opies can be erected—practically only a roof supported by four strong posts, and since there are no sides the cool of the strong posts of the strong po

The diet of summer chicks is practically the same as that for winter chicks, excepting that less corn (a heating food) should be allowed in the ration. There must be some corn, however. Put in just enough to balance the ration. The thre grains important for chick growth are wheat, oats and corn—In the proportion—(in summer) of two parts cracked wheat, two parts oats (either cracked hulled oats or oatmeal) and one part finely cracked corn, all by measurement. These are mixed and placed in boxes within easy access. After the chicks are a few weeks old give them a mash composed of two parts bran (by weight) to one part each of middlings, oatmeal, cornmeal and meat scrap. Of this only enough is given each morning that the chicks will eat up clean.

Fresh Water Necessary ever. Put in just enough to balance

Fresh Water Necessary.

Fresh water must be constantly be fore them. It is wonderful how fre-quently these little youngsters run to he drinking vessels. They have nabitual thirsts, and to deprive them of water, if even for only an hour

I like the plan best of constantly keeping a cracked grain diet before the chicks, so they can help themselves at will. Their little crops hold but a teaspoonful of food at a time, and, as they are continually exercising, running to and fro, their food soon digests, and they become hungry again. Where chicks are on range they will secure plenty of green food, but where they are kept on more limited space it is important that they receive some green stuff daily, like lawn clippings, sprouted oats or lettuce.

always in demand during the holidays, at prices that remain high year after year.

If a few commonsense methods are adopted in raising the young turkeys as a fetr they are hatched the greater part of this annual loss may be avoided. Turkeys under six weeks or two months old are about as delicate and to man allow the young ones to become wet and chilled through being trailed around through wet grass and so, weeds, and they will simply lay down and die. Place a quantity of clean, sharp sand in the coop, which need not be more than six feet square. Give the poults also a quantity of clean, sharp chick grit, and fresh water twice a day, adding enough permanganate of potash to the water to give it the color of claret wine. When the poults are not less than forty-eight hours old give them their first feed, which should be pinhead oatmeal or flaked oats. Feed about half a teaspoonful for each poult, at the same time giving the mother hen a feed of whole corn and oats. Repeat this feeding about four times the first day.

Constant and unremitting warfare must be waged against all forms of insect pests, however, if the chicks hatched under hens are to grow properly and retain their vigor and vitality. Mites, head lice and other insects must be kept off the chicks, and this will require extra attention and extra work. All the trouble and work, however, will be well worth while, for the reason that it will cut down the mortality that otherwise would reduce the flocks, if not exterminate them.

This fact has been proven by tests under all conditions. Stareola is recommended for tollets, outhouses, com-

The first thing to see to, of course, is the coops in which the hens are confined—taking for granted that the hens are confined—taking for granted that the hens are confined must be hens, during incubation and before, have been carefully dusted with a reliable insect powder. The coops in which the hens are confined must be kept scrupulously clean and must be kept scrupulously clean and must be treated with some sort of spray wash at frequent intervais. Whitewash in which crude carbolic acid has been mixed is as good and as cheap as anything. The proportion should be about half a teacup of the crude carbolic acid to a two-gallon pail of thin whitewash, and the mixture list should be applied liberally to every portion of the inside of the coop, using a spraying device, or an old broomanything that will put the mixture list every corner, crack and crevice of the coop.

A mixture of kreolin and water, according to directions printed in the bottles or cans containing the kreolin, is an efficacious remedy for all kinds is an efficacious remedy for all kinds of lice or other insect pesis of poultry. So is a mixture of crude carbolic acid and kerosene, one part of the acid and kerosene. The latter mixture hould be applied to the entire brough. It is best to do this in the foremand the head of the coop until late in the afternoon. The worms finally the chicks to ranse. The little fellows twill have been confined in slatted coops which will keep the hens shut up while permitting the chicks to ranse. The little fellows twill not go far from the mother hen, and consequently will not be dragged around through weeds and grass wet with dew or rain, as would be the case if the hens themselves were allowed free range.

crick the Great of Prussia and Catherine of Russia, in which Austria was invited to take part. About one-third of Poland was seized on this occasion. The second partition, in 1793, and the third in 1795, practically completed the dismemberment of the ancient kingdom, and after the congress of Vienna, a century ago, nothing was left of Poland but a memory. Before the first partition the kingdom stretched from the Carpathians to the Baltic, a distance of 600 miles. It is to these original lines that the czar has promised to restore Poland after-the conclusion of the present war. During the last century Germany, Austria and Russia alike have sought to stamp out the language, little that all the governments at the poles, but with little success. The attempt to force school children to adopt the German tongue has resulted in many "strikes" of the pupils, and the Poles, have been so determined in their attitude that all the governments involved have been forced to make compromises.

Raising Turkeys. Anybody who can get a few turkey eggs and who has a reliable old hen under which to set them, can hatch turkeys-that is one of the easiest things in the world to do, because about 98 out of every 100 turkey eggs are fertile and hatchable. But raising the young turkeys, or "poults," as they are called, is another proposition en-tirely. Men who have been raising turkeys all their lives count on losing at least half of the poults that hatch; which is one reason why turkeys are always in demand during the holidays at prices that remain high year after
